Drug addiction has become a major cause of concern all over the globe. Drug addiction, also called substance disorder abuse is an inability to stop using drugs such as narcotics and marijuana. A large percentage of youth are taking to drugs and losing lives. Such an addiction is bad for their health mentally, physically and emotionally. Drug addiction is bad not only for the individual but also for the society. Victims of such abuse are in pitiable conditions. A drug addict loses his control over mind and engages in activities that are considered illegal for mankind- kidnappings, murder, robbery, burglary and the list is endless. It also harms their relationships the addiction can have adverse effects on their moods - they can get very aggressive at times and can be murderous. It is not easy to quit addiction all at once. It is a long and gradual process and has to be dealt with smartly and wisely. Quitting all at once can take a toll on their lives and the withdrawal effects can be very harmful - heart diseases, respiratory problems, emotional imbalance, incessant vomiting, etc. A drug addict should be treated only by a professional. There are several ways to fight addiction, drugs in particular. They can seek the help of the counsellors to fight distress. Doctors treat those using medicines and therapies that fight not just addiction but problems of anxiety and depression. Rehabilitation centres have been built to admit drug addicts. Drug addicts may also have suicidal thoughts. Their family members should support them in all ways to overcome such thoughts. Drug addiction campaigns must be run in schools, universities and colleges stating the ill effects of the same and ways to treat such patients. Even if a patient is fully cured, he/she may need to be treated for life as there are chances of relapse anytime. Yoga, meditation, regular counselling sessions and medication can help them stay away from drugs.
